How about a dark era dealing with the post-war years between WWII and Korean War, when the world thought for a second, "Holy crap maybe I can finally kick my feet up." Vampires setting up new courts in the ruined nations, werewolves putting the spiritual back together, mages pursuing making a better world, there's a whole gamut to work with.

Anyone proposed the British "colonization" or India, or anywhere during the invasion(s) of Genghis Khan?

I think we clearly need an all 80s Dark Eras book (Totally Dark Eras?), with each line getting a different aspect of the decade. Demon doing the last parts of the Cold War (everything from The Day After and Red Dawn to the big thawing of relations that ended up giving us stuff like Red Heat), Werewolf covering South Africa in the last decade of Apartheid, Changeling doing the likes of Less Than Zero, Bright Lights Big City and Light of Day, some sort of Innocents thing doing the "horror invades suburbia" genre of Fright Night, Monster Squad and so forth, a Slasher bit about the original zenith of that genre, Promethean in the early 80s Rust Belt, 80s Japanese Vampire, Geist in 80s Britain with an early Clive Barker vein, and maybe New Wave Mage.

Agreed, an 80s splatbook is certainly something worth looking into. Is there any way to convince the lunatics running this particular asylum?

I have mentioned Mongol Empire in general before, not sure if it was this thread though. Werewolf/Geist were my picks for that.

I could also see Vampire (for the impending horde threatening their once safe hunting grounds), Promethean (for the wide ranging scope), or Beast (for the persistent fear of being invaded).

There's actually an interesting potential Demon angle in the Mongol invasions of eastern Europe, I think. After they entered what is now Poland and crushed a force of, IIRC, Knights Templar, the horde had to turn around and go back to central Asia, as the Khan had just died and their leader needed to go try to make his claim to be the next Khan. Had this death not occurred when it did, odds are the Mongols would have continued into the Holy Roman Empire, France and/or Italy, derailing the Renaissance and the Age of Exploration (save whatever the English and Swedes ended up doing).

We had New Wave Vampire. I don't think the idea is too outlandish.

I know the idea of 70s/80s Satanic Cult panic as a Beast setting has been thrown around. It would also fit with Totally 80s Dark Eras.

I unfortunately don't know enough about Mummy to suggest an 80s setting for it.

Hmm. Valley Girl Princess?

I'd go with Reganomics and the War on Drugs.

I think Princess during the tail end of the Soviet Union might be more appropriate. Princess is all about political activism, and Nobility would have been right there as the Berlin Wall fell, either for or against.

I'd really like to see Genius set in Europe between WW1 and WW2. One of Genius' themes is how human intellectualism can go horribly wrong, and the interwar period has that in spades.

You have the very idea of "the war to end all wars" that caused a generation to go to war and die. You have the declining ideals of empire. And young powerful ideas, fascism and communism, promise a shineing new future born in blood.

Players will be brilliant people, scarred by WW1 (weather they fought in the front lines or not) who realised the ideals they fought for were hollow and flawed and must struggle to accept this. Some will find closure, and others, they will learn nothing and they will burn the world with the light of their Inspiration.

I don't know enough about East German history to comment on the fall of the Berlin Wall but Valley Girl Princess could work too. Maybe it's not enough for an entire Dark Era but the players playing Princesses reincarnated as Valley Girls and discovering there's more to life through having wildly different personalities in their two forms could be cool.

Satanic Panic was more of an 80s/90s thing, but the foundation for it was laid in the 70s so...

Also I would vote the final days of the Soviet Union (including the Soviet Afghan war for Mummy), since the end of an empire would be thematically appropriate for the game-line

Despite the user name I am actually bigender.

Mummy Vice? I guess the high concept would be Crocket and Tubbs vs Scarface as seen through the lens of M:tC?

It occurs to me that Miami Vice debuted in 1984, and that, in addition to the obvious Orwell connection, a lot of pop culture and political stuff from that year would seem to make it an ideal year for just about every CoD game line in some way or another. Besides Miami Vice, it's the same year of the V miniseries, the debut of Highway to Heaven, Lifestyles of the Rich & the Famous, Tales from the Darkside, The Cosby Show, and Night Court, along with continuing series like Cagney & Lacey, Hill Street Blues, The A-Team, Magnum PI, Knight Rider, Cheers, Dallas, Falcon Crest and Dynasty.
Film wise, it's the year of Ghostbusters, A Nightmare on Elm Street, The Terminator, Streets of Fire, Sixteen Candles, Purple Rain, Night of the Comet, Moscow on the Hudson, The Never-ending Story, The Karate Kid, The Last Starfighter, Gremlins, Friday the 13th: The Final Chapter (pt 4), Footloose, Firestarter, Children of the Corn, The Adventures of Buckaroo Banzai, Beverly Hills Cop, Breakin', CHUD, The Company of Wolves, Red Dawn, Indiana Jones & The Temple of Doom, Dune, Dreamscape, The Natural, Once Upon a Time in America, Repo Man, and 1984.
In the world of books, it's the year of William Gibson's Neuromancer, Stephen King's The Talisman (with Peter Straub) and Thinner (as Richard Bachman), John Updike's The Witches of Eastwick, Bob Shea & Robert Willson's Illuminatus trilogy, the first of Clive Barker's Books of Blood collections, and Tom Clancy's The Hunt for Red October. Comics-wise, it's the year Alan Moore started writing Swamp Thing.

Elsewhere, there's the US presidential election (including the first major party ticket to include a woman), the Summer Olympics in LA and the Winter Olympics in Sarajevo, the breakup of the US Bell telephone monopoly, UK coal miner strikes, the Brighton Hotel bombing,and the agreement to eventually turn Hong Kong over the China.
