I'm currently trying to work out some sort of concept revolving around Stephen King's early work, as well as that of other paperback horror material of the period (1984: King Country or something like that), primarily aimed at Hunters and the sort of characters from the core book, Second Sight and Innocents. Classmates that turn out to be mentally unstable psychokinetics or are possessed by haunted cars, buried ancient alien vessels, unfathomable horrors in the town sewer, cursed hotels, small towns that up and die for mysterious reasons, cursed burial grounds, werewolf murders, demonically possessed industrial machinery, corn gods, and people who wake up from comas with psychic powers. And lurking in the background are mysterious organizations (TFV, Cheiron, Vanguard, Barrett Commission, Null Mysteriis) that seem to want to harness or control these forces, especially any children who seem to develop special abilities.

What is tolerance? It is the consequence of humanity. We are all formed of frailty and error; let us pardon reciprocally each other's folly. That is the first law of nature.
Voltaire, "Tolerance" (1764)

This kind of overlaps with the Souless and the Damned timelinewise, but I thought Promethean during the height of the silk road trade (Pax Mongolia contemporary with Marco Polo's journeys for the most part.) would be cool. The silk road has so many themes appropriate for Promethean, after all the road itself is the ultimate road trip adventure, and the fact that its two endpoints (China and Europe/Middle East) also connect two disparate forms of alchemy seems far too appropriate. Would also be an opportunity to consider lineages that depart from the largely Western/Middle Eastern stories (with Ulgans being the primary exceptions.) for some new stuff. (I remember Tulpas were a concept that was only touched on in 1e, Tibet making up a large part of the road would be an opportunity to expand on that.)
