Between everything, I call dibs on naming Aiko a demon using Mundane embeds to appear as a little bit of everything. And now, run away!

I actually prefer him to be just a canny mortal, personally. While it is fair that most mortals are victims or pawns in the Chronicles of Darkness, I like it when we have the occasional super badass mortal keeping up with the predators by sheer wit, grit and a bit of luck.

Politeness is the lubricant of social intercourse.

The difficulty is pulling it off well. It works easily enough in linear fiction where the author controls everything, but CofD is interactive. I mean, I can think of some basic ideas for how he'd go about what he's doing, but the game would require putting that planning against the players who may well find some flaw in his plans.

I would like Inoue to be mortal occultist, using magical charms, talismans and just "knowing right people" (the Silver Ladder) to make his demands real. He could even use mechanics of "Building Equipment" (Talismans) from Chronicles of Darkness rulebook. 😉
