Baltic Crusades would be pretty awesome!

Dark forests, Gothic castles, Pagans still worshiping the "Old Gods", Powerful Knightly Orders, what's not to love?

Which game-line(s), though? Beast (see above), Hunter (travel to new lands, meet new people and kill their monsters), Mage (strong showings for Adamantine Arrow, Mysterium, and Silver Ladder, with some Seer manipulation on the side), Geist (massive death tends to draw/create Sin-Eaters), Promethean (it is kinda a Pilgrimage)?

Malkydel: "And the Machine dictated; let there be adequate illumination."
Yossarian: "And lo, it was optimal."

This is the list I posted on the previous page, which I assume Second Chances was responding to:

I feel that the Baltic Crusades were best for Werewolf and Hunter. The region was an untamed, primitive wilderness (or at least the crusaders probably saw it that way) where practice of pantheistic religions was still common, a perhaps safer place for werewolves to dwell in the uncertain times of Christianity's spread. We could also see how the Crusades, and the gradual Christianization of the Pagans would affect the spirit worlds. During the Crusades against the Pagans several Holy Orders were established, most notably the Teutonic and Livonian Orders. They erected great Castles and gained enough power that they effectively became their own states. This would be an interesting place to explore Hunter organizations, as well as introduce new compact or conspiracies for other sects of Christianity. (We've only seen Catholic and American Evangelical groups in the Hunter books so far, no Orthodox groups. The Baltic Crusades happened right on the doorstep of Orthodox Christendom and Orthodox realms like Novgorod would often butt-heads with the new Holy orders.)
