People have floated around the idea of Ascended Mummy Cap. It could be one of the Sybarises that make people worship you

Going purely by MCU portrayal;

Ultron: Stannum Promethean who spends most of the last part of the movie in his "Destructive" Torment after losing his progeny, Vision.

Dr. Strange: Mysterium Obrimos, since at the end he seems more interested in researching magic than being directly proactive.

Hela: Incarnate Anakim drawing power from her Myth as the Executioner of Gods.

Ego: Powerful idigam who has Coalesced around the concept of Growth.

I would point Strange as more 'healer camp' Adamantine Arrow. He want to excel in what he do, he want's to literally heal the world - and in the end, he does gladly fight the Darkness - only in smart, not brutish way.

I don't like the idea of the Fantastic Four being different types of supernatural creatures--I vote for them all being the same kind of thing, and for me the obvious choice is a Krewe of Sin-Eaters. They rocketed off into space, died by cosmic radiation or somesuch, and bonded with some elemental Geister to make it back to ground. Going based on nWoD rules (because we haven't got CoD rules for Sin-Eaters yet), I'd say they must all have taken Caul manifestations with one elemental Key apiece.

I agree with the poster who said that Black Panther should be a Hunter, but I reckon some arm of the Ascendant Order rather than a custom conspiracy. His powers, such as they are, come from eating the sacred heart-shaped herb.

With the Geist preview out, I could see Ghost Rider kinda-somewhat as a Bound, though I still think he works better as a Beast, really.
Anyone seeing a place for a Bound in the Marvel Universe?

White Tiger, maybe? The Tiger God could be the same Geist, making the Bargain with three different members of the same family (Hector, Angela and Ava) and with the jade amulet as its Touchstone.
