GM Angels are complicated, and use a couple of Arcana to properly affect.

Have the Arcana necessary to deal with Angels been explicitly indicated in any Mage or Demon supplement?

Nope. No Mage supplements since the GMC rules update came out.

Stopgaps indicate Prime + Spirit are the Arcana to interact with angels with Awakened magic.

Furthermore, angels aren't in the core Mage book, either. At least not in the back part that talks about the rules for ephemeral entities. The three ephemeral entities discussed are Goetics, Ghosts, and Spirits. While there's likely going to be some references to the God Machine (especially with the Obrimos), it sounds like the game itself isn't going to go into large detail.

Personally, I like having the GM folded spaces serve as a fifth "realm" to go along with the Hedge, Shadow, Underworld, and Astral. At least, that's what the Unchained and Begotten seem to be focusing on as "traversable realms." As I do hope they move away from that. I mean, that was quite common with goetic demons and geist, but things ended up moving away from that direction as more books came out. Now, we have goetic beings with no Spirit required to manipulate. We have ghosts that increase by rank, and purely manipulated by Death, making the geister have less of a hold on the idea of "powerful ghosts."

The whole "hybrid of Hisil spirit and something else" is just problematic when it comes to dealing with the entities, and rather unfaithful to the themes. I don't feel that it doesn't make a lot of sense for someone who studies biomechanical horrors to also need fairly strong background in studying animism. It feels like too much of a departure.

Is it for sure that Goetia will replace angels in the core book? I haven't seen any reference to that, although I may have missed it.

In earlier books this "realm" is called Interstitial Terrain, and it's a mystery not necessarily related to the God Machine. You could of course interpret it as a God Machine created realm, and the aesthetic of most examples does not clash with that interpretation, but I would keep it as an open question. But no matter what the origin is, I do agree that these spatial anomalies resulting in alternate space make for interesting Mage material.

In my opinion it should depend on the entity. Sometimes needing multiple Arcana could be logical, especially if a creature does not fit firmly in the domain of one Arcanum. For Goetic beings it does not make sense to need Spirit (on the other hand I would argue that if you create a body for one using Spirit, only the Spirit Arcanum would be necessary to manipulate that). But Geists, even if interpreted as powerful ghost, do seem to have changed in a way to become closer to Spirits, taking concepts as Anchors, and maybe taking on spirit influences altogether (but there is no information whether this is the case at this point). Maybe, because they have drifted away from what a Ghost normally is, and have become closer to Spirits of a way of dying, it could be argued that they now also consist of symbols of Spirit as well.

I'm pretty sure. I'll add a reference when I find it.

EDIT: It doesn't seem to be in a blog post, so I gues it is in a forum post or comment somewhere. Or we are having a mass delusion...

Okay, cool! I did a quick search of Dave's post for the world "goetic." I don't think I turned up an exact reference, but it seems pretty clearly implied. This is probably the best one: http://forum.theonyxpath.com/forum/m...324#post118324

Awakening 2nd ed does not mention angels or the God-Machine at all. It gives rules for three kinds of ephemeral entities: spirits, ghosts, and goetics (the beings you find in the astral). It also gives rules for Supernal entities, which share many rules with ephemeral entities (like core stats) but not all (they aren't made of epherema, don't have influences, don't have manifestations, have Arcanum ratings, use mana instead of Essence and aren't affected by powers that affect ephemeral beings). Abyssal entities are a template that goes over any creature type of your choice - Gulmoth are abyssal spirits, Acamoth are abyssal goetics.

This is why there's no Supernal or Familiars in the 2e core, by the way, because the Familiar bond is a Manifestation on the ephemeral entity's end. We'd have to come up with a seperate set of familiar rules for them, which we don't have room to do.

Interstitial Terrain (and God-Machine facilities, which are a subset of it - the GM doesn't account for all cases of warped distance) isn't another realm like the Shadow, it's just the material world, stretched or folded. Mages can investigate it with Space spells. Some Space spells can cause it.

Also, in first edition a Geist was a powerful ghost that may have been hybridized with a spirit.

In second edition, a Geist is a Rank 4 or 5 ghost, while a Kerberos is a Rank 6+ ghost. Awakening 2nd ed will be your first look at what ghosts higher than Rank 2 look like (they have their own set of Rank names, like spirits have gaffling, jaggling, etc).

Though, if the second edition ball keeps rolling, it won't be your last look at them!

Eyes GenCon over the horizon

Excellent... Thanks for the confirmation and explanation Dave. I'm super excited to see how all of this works out.

Thanks Dave!

I will say, I hope mage gets a GMC styled book in 2e. Not specifically for Demon, but just because it is a huge Mystery in the nWoD, and if any splat outside of Demon and Mortals is going to go riffing into its affairs, I would expect it to be the mages

Sooo... what happens if one applies an Abyssal template onto something that's already been infected by an Infernal Whisperer?

Oh god, an Abyssal version if a living vice? In other words, a vice that doesn't exist within our reality... I don't even want to know.
