Non-Fiction Online Resources for Chronicle of Darkness #1

06-02-2017, 12:45 PM

As I'm sure many of you have noticed, education is kinda a theme with me. I've started to compile some online resources that will apply to each gameline. Since CofD is set in a dark mirror of our world, there are a lot of materials that could go in this post, but I will try to be selective. While I am keeping Chronicles in mind while I do this, you could use these links for any other RPG that is set on historical Earth (I'm looking at you, Call of Cthulhu!) Some links may show up more than once if they fit in multiple categories. This post is very much a work in progress and probably will never be complete because of the broad availability of applicable materials. If you know of a resource that you don't see on my list, please feel free to PM or comment to say what the resource is and why it should be included on the list. I'll do my best to add it in.

General Websites

- Crash Course: It's free, it's on Youtube, and it's in a ten-minute episodic format.
- Coursera: Coursera is a website where university level classes are available for free. You can also get certifications from Coursera for a fee so you can build your resume while planning your next chronicle.
- Dan Carlin's Hardcore History: Dan loves historical "What if?" moments, and with good reason. If you want to hear the most badass historical stories, examine how drugs, alcohol, and human stupidity impacted history, or get a sense of what it was like to live through the most brutal historical eras, this is the place for you.
- edX: Another excellent site with free courses that you can upgrade for a certificate. A good place to look for courses in the humanities and religion.
- Great Course/Great Courses Plus: GC and GC+ are not free services, but they have such an extraordinarily high production value that you can understand why. History, science, culinary theory, economics, anything you can think of is covered in the Great Courses catalogue. Great Courses Plus is their streaming service, which at $15/month for an annual subscription is a killer deal.
- Google Books/Google Scholar: My first goto for research of any kind, and the first place I advise my students to begin their research. Seriously, I've written papers, then had them published just using these two. Use them.

- JSTOR: If you have operated in any kind of academic circle for the last two and a half decades, you know JSTOR. Full access is tough to come by unless you are currently enrolled in a university, but you can still sign up for free to get access to journals on topics you just can't find anywhere else (like the Mutapa Empire). Sign up with multiple users if you have to. It works. Trust me.
- Open Yale Courses: University classes, taped lectures, and course materials, all from one of the best educational institution in the world. Take advantage of them.
- The Vault: Declassified FBI documents. A lot more of them involve the paranormal than you may expect. An excellent source of inspiration both for things that actually happened or that people think happened.
- Writing with Colour: The best place to go to check yourself for unintentionally problematic depictions of POC in your games. Also a great read if you are looking for details and cultural beats for NPCs you don't share a background with. They are awesome and you'd be surprised how many chronicle ideas you can get just by binging their archive.

Crossover Chronicles

- The Great War: Coverage of WW1, on a week by week basis, 100 years later. World War I changed the world, for mortals and supernaturals alike.
- The History of Rome Podcast: Rome is one of the two cities that broadly unifies all of the Chronicle of Darkness gamelines. This is the best history of Rome you will ever hear, so I suggest using it.
- Revolutions Podcast: An excellent look at what happens when people get fed up with their governments. A number of the Revolutions covered within have shown up in multiple gamelines.
- Begin Japanology: A Japanese Production specifically targeting Westerners seeking education about what Japan is really like as opposed to the pop culture portrayal. Invaluable for games set in Tokyo. I used to be able to find all of Begin Japanology on Youtube, courtesy of the company that produced them, but now many of them have disappeared. You can find an episode list here.
- Understanding Japan - A Cultural History: An excellent look at how Japan's history shaped its evolution into the modern nation that forms that basis of the Tokyo crossover setting.

Beast the Primordial

- General
    - Ancient Marine Reptiles: Yeah, I know, Beast is supposed to be about dragons and monsters, but I guarantee you that plenty of ancient reptiles are also stalking the Primordial Dream. Plus, aquatic reptiles are awesome and don't get enough face time with the public, so you might want to think about your next Beast being one.

- Dino 101: The ultimate course about Dinosaurs. Very beastly.
- Early Vertebrate Evolution: What's so scary about ancient fish, you ask? Only razor jaws and bone for skin.
- Secrets to Sleep Science
- Theropod Dinosaurs and the Origins of Birds: At five lessons long, this course is pretty short, and the content matter is fascinating (says the biology teacher).

- Dark Eras

Changeling the Lost

- General

  - Secrets to Sleep Science
  - Successful Negotiation - Essential Strategies and Skills: A very, very Changeling course.

- Dark Eras

  - Atlas Historique de Paris: I can't read French, but I am assured by people who do that this is an excellent resource.

Hunter the Vigil

- General
  - Introduction to Forensics
- Aegis Kai Doru
  - Archaeology - An Introduction to the World's Greatest Sites
- Ahl al-Jabal (Source)
  - Ismaili Gnosis: Okay, breaking alphabetical order here, but this one is special. If you have a passing familiarity with Islam, you may have had the initial thought that the write-up of Ahl al-Jabal doesn't look like anything you've seen before. That's because Ahl al-Jabal are Nizari Ismaili Shiites and trust me when I say it is extremely accurate (minus the vampire hunting). Ismaili Gnosis is an excellent source for current events, history, and particularly metaphysics as it applies to Ismailis.
  - Assassin Legends: The Assassin State of the Crusades is legendary, but what most people know about them is just that: legend. If you are using the Ahl al-Jabal, either in historical or modern chronicles, let Farhad Daftary bust the myths about the Nizari State for you. This link only gives you a preview on Google Books, so some pages will be missing, but it is still worth a read.

Mage the Awakening

- General
  - Addiction and the Brain: Mage 2e's theme is "Addicted to Mysteries." Understanding that addiction is a good place to start.
  - The Addictive Brain
  - Ancient Philosophy - Aristotle & His Successors
  - Ancient Philosophy - Plato & His Predecessors: If there is one course on philosophy you take for Mage, it should probably be this one. At four lessons, this is a pretty quick one to complete.

- Crash Course Games

Geography

- Mountains 101

History

- Internet History, Technology, and Security: For the Network Zero fans.
- Magic in the Middle Ages

History of Specific Nations

- Foundations of Eastern Civilization: An excellent introduction and overview. Mostly focuses on China, but also covers Japan, Korea, Mongolia and Southeast Asia.
- History of Ancient Egypt: Everyone knows how awesome the course is, and Bob Brier is an excellent speaker, even if some of his hypotheses about King Tut have been refuted since this was originally made.
- History of the United States 2nd Edition: If you aren't American and are running a chronicle in the States that remotely relies on history, this is an incredibly comprehensive course and probably worth the $15/month subscription to GC+ on its own.
- Indigenous Canada
- Introduction to Ancient Egypt and Its Civilisation

- Maya to Aztec - Ancient Mesoamerica Revealed
- Understanding Japan - A Cultural History

Religion and Mythology

- Crash Course Mythology: Each gameline draws on mythology in its own way, so CC Mythology is fairly broadly applicable.

Changeling the Dreaming?

Malkydel: "And the Machine dictated; let there be adequate illumination."
Yossarian: "And lo, it was optimal."

I would like to suggest the CNN decades series, which is on Netflix. It makes for a very good highlights reel/cliff notes of the 70s and 80s for those that weren't around for those decades or were too young to remember them, but it is fairly surface level beginner stuff for someone who was around for those events. The 80s season in particular has episodes that focus on 80s issues that are particularly relevant to a New Wave Requiem chronicle and the episodes What's Going On and Cults and Crimes of the 70s are a good resource for Bowery Dogs campaigns.

Also Satan's Silence is the definitive work on the Satanic Panic and was written right the panic was finally burning out, so it has the benefit of being fresh in the memories of those involved. For a work that the benefit of more time passing and more facts and research into the panic coming out as a result, look for We Believe the Children: A Moral Panic in the 1980s

Those sounds like excellent resources!

I'm not going to link To Netflix series since those tend to be highly localized (indeed, I can't find any of these series on Canadian Netflix), but I'm hoping they may be streaming on CNN Go. I'll have to take a look, but they are a really good addition. I may add them without the link.

Has the Satanic Panic been featured yet in any books? If not, I'm probably going to hold off on adding those other two since I could conceivably link to every single interesting point in history and make the list impossibly unwieldy. That said, I am hedging my bets that the Satanic Panic will featured in Dark Eras 2, so even if it hasn't been meantioned yet, I will keep them in mind for the future.

Satanic Panic was mentioned in New Wave Requiem as manifesting in the all night society as a panic about Brood infiltrators in kindred domains Big update! I've added in all of the compacts and conspiracies from Hunter, and provided at least one link for each. If I've missed anyone, please let me know.

Since the C&Cs and Dark Eras are spread over a wide number of books, I've also given links to the books they are featured in, just in case anyone sees interesting resources under one of them and wants to check them out.

They have the original Robert Stack run of Unsolved Mysteries on Amazon prime and the Dennis Farina reboot free on youtube. I can't help but like the idea of PC coterie's antics winding up on the Robert Stack version in a New Wave Requiem game

Is the one on Youtube actually uploaded by the company that has the rights to the show? While it is definitely a great resource, I'm a bit leery of linking to an illegal upload.
