What do you want out of Dark Eras 2?

I'd also love to see the Industrial Revolution in another Dark Eras book, but rather than just Werewolf, I'd want it to be a mega chapter for an everyday crossover setting. Between Vampire, Mage, Demon and the rest, I think each would have their own interesting problems and chances coming about during the period. (Like the great refusal as long as I'm not screwing up memory wise for the timeline.)

I'll reiterate my usual pitches of Ayutthaya Werewolf, and either First or Fourth Crusade middle east Werewolf. However, I'd also be tempted to fish through Ming Dynasty history for weird events that a good Werewolf chapter could hang off; or alternatively I'd want to go with 1800s Hong Kong Werewolf, specifically the bit where the British conflicted with the five Great Clans of the walled villages in the surrounding area.

Or, alternatively, 10th Century Poland Werewolf - the Baptism of Poland in 966, the annihilation of the pagan faiths and the beginning of the Polish nation. Or maybe the later 1300s or 1400s with the wars with the Teutonic order.

Or, fuckit, Vatican Werewolf during one of the particularly turbulent eras for the Papacy.

Or Attila: Total Werewolf because, again, why not.

So, as Yet Another Pitch from me: I'd love to do Industrial Revolution Werewolf in Europe, with the Uratha struggling to cope with the tidal wave of new spirit courts and colossally powerful spirit nobles birthed from the industrialisation taking place, the pollution and machinery masking the scuttling presence of a huge boom in the power of the Beshilu, and the social conflicts of the human population through whom this new era is being birthed. Iron Masters trying to chain massive industry spirit-gods into obeisance, a grand Rat Host plan to pull hellish, interstitial-place Other Cities into the world and establish a Plague Dominion, bizarre Claimed-machinery masterminds spreading their influence with every piece of track laid down for the trains that serve as their limbs and minds, human spiritualists' interference threatening the People, and the way everything fed into the demand for more raw materials, for the spreading of power, for the grasping reach of empires bourne up upon the back of industry's march.

@Acrozatarim, you sound like this:

I don't want to do the Nameless War / Great Refusal in a Dark Era. The format's too short for it.

It was global, right? Seems like its own book would be more appropriate. It would be interesting to see some of the more prominent Nameless Orders. The whole 'lost organizations' thing is one of the coolest parts of second edition, starting from way back in Blood & Smoke's lost clans and lost covenants.

Poo, I wanted an era that was Persia in the Nameless War, specifically to find out more about Razi.

Agreed. I really would like to see some Nameless Orders fleshed out.

That's sounds excellent. It would be even better as Demon and/or Mage crossover.

The Industrial Revolution's impact on the God Machine must have been colossal.

The Mysteries birthed by the Industrial Revolution, and new and novel applications of the Arcana, would also be perfect for Mage.

It is the announcement of the chapter on Nameless War in the Tome of Pentacle?

Why would "the format's too short for it" be an announcement of an even shorter section?

No, it's not an announcement of anything.

@DaveB well then I hope you get enough traction for a full Nameless War/Great Refusal book ala the Requiem for Rome pair. I for one would buy it in an instant.

I really hope Vampire comes out strong, it didn't get enough love during the first Dark Eras, even though Requiem for Regina was one of the better ones.

As a single era meant to cover the whole century all over the globe, yeah I can definietly see that. Would it be plausible though to have an important snippet of it in an era though? Like see it breaking out in a Revolutionary France setting?

I'm actually going to be a bit boring here: I want rise of the HRE in Europe (for practically anyone). The traditional middle ages at their height. The reason being that... Well. It's the middle ages.
I'm getting a bit of a feeling that some of the eras are way too... I don't know how to put it... Niche?
I'd like something a bit broader. Something a bit more well known.

Also, of course, I am going to second Chris' Industrial Revolution.

And, honestly, anywhere that gives us a write-up of a whole new vampire covenant. Preferably an Arabian or Persian one.

I thought, since Requiem for Rome, that they tried to avoid traditional 'Dark Ages' because that was classic's thing. But Viking werewolf certainly broached on it.

More abstractly, I want settings that add new Covenants to Vampire, new Nameless Orders to Mage, more Courts to Changeling, and possibly new philosophies outside of the lessons thing for Beast.

Besides the Dante's Italy one I mentioned, my main idea or a medieval Europe setting was to do a Hunter/Demon crossover in Cathar France. The Bon Hommes are a Gnostic Compact that struggles against the Demiurge of the Material World (God Machine), The Sacred Order of the Knights of Saint George (Conspiracy, and a secret division of the Templars) are not solely Mage-focused yet, and fight against any unholy beings who would defy the order of creation and bring down divine wrath from outside of it.
