Have I already talked about my Mythic Greek Beast/Changeling crossover, where Beasts are self-appointed Furies who believe they act on behalf of the Olympian gods they've never seen but don't know how to handle the Lost, who are touched by the "divine" and scarred by the experience?

@Acrozatarim, you sound like this:

Well, I have a few ideas for Mage and Vampire ones too, but Werewolf is where I'm most confident in how I'd match the themes and events together.

Can we hear some of your vampire ideas?

Also do you have any werewolf + vampire ideas for Eras? I find the double-up concept interesting but it seems harder to pull off.

I'd love to do something for Vampire in India. Not sure exactly when, but I think I'd want to aim at a period of major decline for a ruling power. Have all sorts of fun stuff running around; rakshasa, vetala, etc.

Also, a bit of a non-standard one: Book of Highways and Kingdoms Vampire, ie 11th Century north and central Africa. I'd love to see it done in an almost travelogue style touching on a series of vampire polities and cultures, from regular Kindred to weirder stuff like areas where the Adze of Ghanan folklore are a dominant subspecies. Have an Al-Bakri-esque figure writing about the various areas from their distant viewpoint, then with a description of what it's really like from a local point of view, rules for key elements, etc. You could get an amazing overview of how the Kindred had adapted in some really interesting cultures and nations of the time.

For Vampire & Werewolf, I'd want to do a Mongol expansion era; either the reign of Genghis, or a more specific area a few generations down the line like early Yuan China. Werewolf is obvious, but the reason for Vampire is because, well... think about it. Pre-expansion, what does it mean to be a vampire in the Land of the Eternal Blue Sky? What sort of vampire societies and oddities would form in those circumstances? And then, following their expansion, how do the Kindred societies carried into contact with the existing vampiric populations of subjugated areas cope? Do they adapt and become rulers, or do they become ruled in turn? How are they forced to change to survive, and what changes do they force on the Kindred in the lands conquered and ruled by the Mongols?

Another Vampire/Werewolf crossover I'd want is Beast of Gevaudan France. There's already some groundwork laid in the Werewolf 2e corebook about Gevaudan, and it'd be an intriguing scenario to have Uratha and French vampires all caught up scheming, allying, fighting and backstabbing one another.

I've been trying to put together a pitch for 1960s Hunter (or possibly Hunter/Changeling) and the words just aren't coming to me.

I know it's a good idea, damn it!

The thread on the Mist-Blinded has reminded me... I'd to see some more Proximi and other demisplats in some Eras. Ghoul families would en another good addition.

Neat, the bloodline books for vampire started to lean heavily towards the East, which I thought was a trend it was going to stick with but didn't, there's a lot of cool stuff that was never expanded on. Plus obviously a huge area with a long past.

People are always asking for more Asian and African eras, and if your Likes are anything it seems like you've got some good ideas.

That's the quicksilver children and possibly an idigam there, right? Bickering and power plays among the two creatures of the night would be great.

Ah. Even so, it makes it less likely we'll be seeing the era again for anything else, which is a shame, because I agree the plague would suit Geist pretty well. Maybe the London 1603 outbreak instead - it's the same disease, it's the year Elizabeth I dies, Londerners in general kept well informed of how many people died of what (which is an interesting element for Geist, I think), and krewe culture could be tied in with theatre culture.

I think I'll offer up Cuban Revolution.

Guerrilla bands fighting capitalist imperials for their destiny in the jungles of the Caribbean. Hell yes. Mummies rise up to wreak havoc on the old guard while werewolves ally with spirits of revolution, or something.

I like the Cuban Revolution idea, big fan of the Caribbean and for other reasons.

Don't know how popular it would be, though, Haiti after Papa Doc was up for votes too and people really seemed to want to avoid it.

Ok, so a few crossover pitches

Hunter/Mummy - Book of Judges (Israelite Shoftim defend their land from dark gods and their cults, while those cults are fleeing Akhenaten back in Egypt)

Mage/Changeling - Golden Age of Islam (1001 Nights!)

Hunter/Demon - Cathar France (Gnostic Compact struggles against the Demiurge, while the Templar Knights of St George hunt those who would subvert natural law and corrupt the faithful)

Promethean/Demon - Mansa Musa Pilgrimage (the pilgrimage of course works great for Prometheans, and the new infrastructure linking the Mali Empire to the greater Muslim world in the east has great DtD potential; the hook is conflicting signs from Angels and Qashmallim, leaning into the mystery of the God Machine and the Principle)

Mage/Geist - Golden Age of Piracy (would also work to swap either out for Demon, but Geist was the possible era last time, and Mage has a hook story hook in this era as the Silver Ladder and the Seers of the Throne allied against the Nassau Nameless - my idea is that this could create a non-aggression relationship that underlies a Libertine alliance with dissastisfied Diamond Mages almost a century later in the French Revolution)

Mage/Beast - French Revolution (I know the original proposed era would have been Mage/Mummy, but as we're getting Mage/Mummy with the Mutapa Empire, I thought this might work better as something different. The outbreak of the Nameless War, paired with rotating Apexes struggling to define the Paris Hive. It's literally called "the Terror" for a reason)

Vampire/Hunter - Pre-Mutiny India (chance to update and substantially expand on the caste Bloodlines of India, with the thuggee hook for Hunters that was offered as one of the possible eras last time)

Werewolf/Geist - Great War (the Horsemen themselves stalk the earth as war, famine, influenza rage; soldiers touch death and are reborn in the trenches while the Uratha stalk new more and more horrific spirits of slaughter and industrialized devastation)

Vampire/Beast - Jazz Age (intrigue and beauty of the Harlem Renaissance set against the era of the greatest post-Civil War racial violence in American History, with a touch of Lovecraft)

To borrow your format, then:

Werewolf - Meiji Japan (the Forsaken are bound to old traditions as foreign modernity intrudes; will they die off with the turning of the age like the samurai and the Japanese wolf [which poetically goes extinct around this time] or kill the old Japan like they once killed Father Wolf when he grew weak?)

Hunter/Changeling, possibly Deviant - 1960s America (New Age cults and Slashers [who may well become 'Mansons' by the end of the decade] keep the dubiously-moral organizations of the time hunting while people return from psychedelic jungles to a rapidly-changing homeland that's on the brink of an unpleasant psychic awakening; an excuse to make Hotel Mascaron canon)

Changeling/Beast - Mythic Greece (the Begotten are self-appointed Furies who believe the gods have sent them to punish hubris but have their credibility threatened by the Lost who are heirs to the divine punishments of Arachne and Medusa)

Vampire/Demon - 1930s Shanghai (the Pearl of the Orient sees her neon-drenched streets occupied by Imperial Japanese and her back alleys flood with White Russian mobsters, local crime bosses, Nazi spies, and wealthy fools from the West looking for an exotic good time; espionage and murder are the name of the game, but there's older and greater things here than the newest mortal nations)

Chicago World's Fair - ALL! (the intrigue of Requiem in the White City is obvious; you also can tie Deviant directly into the eugenics age, Mages dabble in such fields themselves as the modern tech loving Namess draw closer with the Seers as the Nameless War sputters and the Great Refusal nears, Prometheans are drawn in the Current Wars, Demons struggle to find new ways to hide as the God Machine's infrastructure now spans the continent more overtly than ever, one of history's greatest Slashers does his work in the fair's shadows.... etc etc)
